Findings and recommendations:

- There is an abundance of education providers in rural areas – from governmental institutions, adult education centres, NGOs to private organisations – we should get to know each other, collaborate and complement each other.
- We should adapt the location and time of our programmes to fit the rural population.
- We should encourage learning in the rural population.
- We should encourage the rural population to connect, learn and develop their creativity.
- To facilitate rural development, we should combine the potentials and interests of the rural population with the potentials of the rural area and the interests of the broader society in the area for the common good.
